free. I might have been bullied at school too.

Sometimes it's actually not the fault of the bully, but the victim. Sometimes there is a point where you have to pick your battles. Sometimes people will make trouble for you to make themselves feel big. I would hate to think I was responsible for putting you through something you still might be dealing with today, or for the hurt feelings you might be still feeling for today. I'm sorry. I'm sorry you went through what you did. I'm sorry I didn't know what to do. I'm sorry you were so alone. I'm sorry for whatever happened to you when you were little. I'm sorry for being a part of it. I'm sorry that I didn't intervene. I'm sorry for so many other things I can't even remember. I'm sorry you're in pain. I'm sorry. You have my condolences. I hope you can find some comfort in it. Your last paragraph is what got to me, and I wish I could have done more to prevent your being bullied. I'm sorry. Like I said, I'm a worry wart. I think I've always been. I think if there is even a slight chance that something could happen that is not in someone's control, I think it's my job to say something. But, I have my own set of problems, and I still have a fairly high threshold for danger. Sometimes, I'm afraid of people looking at me too much, or everyone in the room suddenly snorting in my face, or even my own parents acting like I'm not in my own place. It would be easy to slip into that I'm not as important and, therefore, I have no right to speak. But, that's not how I feel. I do have a voice and I should
